

Nancy Walker Biography

Pianist and composer Nancy Walker has been recognized with honours Canada-wide. Her most recent recording Deeper Down is a 2026 JUNO nominee (Jazz Album Of The Year - Solo). Past awards include the Montréal Jazz Festival's Grand Prix de Jazz, the National Jazz Awards Keyboardist Of The Year, a JUNO nomination for Instrumental Album Of The Year (Rainy Days And Mondays, 2006), and an induction into the Mississauga Music Walk Of Fame. A dynamic improviser, an artful composer and a responsive accompanist, Nancy has been praised both for her work as a solo artist and as a musical collaborator. As a side player she can be heard on a wide range of jazz recordings, from saxophonist Kirk MacDonald to vocalist Emilie-Claire Barlow. More recently she can be heard on the 2024 recording Here's To Life by John Neudorf (on which she was both pianist and co-producer), and Sarah Jerrom's 2025 JUNO-nominated Magpie.

Nancy's musical scope extends beyond the jazz genre. Earlier in her career Nancy worked extensively as a side musician with a diverse range of artists including Raffi, Sylvia Tyson, Roger Whittaker and The Parachute Club. She is also a commissioned composer of contemporary choral music.

Nancy has several discs to her credit as leader; her most recent album Deeper Down features eight of her original compositions, reflecting her love of nature, her pull toward the cinematic, and her view of the age we live in.

"Nancy Walker has played enough piano to know how to keep listeners interested however hard she pushes the boundaries of familiarity." Toronto Star

"Harmonically she's influenced by the usual suspects—Evans, Hancock, Jarrett, etc.—but her delicate touch and denser harmonic constructs brings to mind British pianist John Taylor as well...Walker's music is easy on the ears, but don't mistake that for lacking in interest or challenge, because she masks an advanced harmonic concept within an accessible veneer." "A fine example of the modern jazz musician's art." The Globe and Mail
